

Relationship #12

The crab spider catches and eats a bee. The spider benefits directly from this relationship by securing a food source. The individual prey animals gain no benefit from this relationship. The prey organism is killed in this relationship. This relationship does have an impact on the physical and behavioral adaptations of surviving prey population descendents.