

Relationship #4

The tick burrows into the cow's skin to suck blood. Significant tick infestations can weaken the host animal. In addition, ticks often carry disease-causing micro-organisms which are transmitted to hosts through a bite. Ticks cannot survive and reproduce without attaching and feeding off of a host animal. The host organism is usually not killed in this relationship.