

Relationship #5

The lion hunts, kills and eats prey animals. The lion and its pride benefit directly from this relationship by securing a food source. The individual prey animal receives no benefit in this relationship. Young, weak or old prey animals tend to be the targets of the lion. The prey organism is killed in this relationship. This relationship does have an impact on the physical and behavioral adaptations of the remaining population prey population descendents.